Learning new skills is one of the best ways to make yourself both marketable and happy, but... Read moreNo other pun or puzzle requires pretty much of your brain as a crossword. Experienced puzzlers consider not only the literal meaning of each clue, but also similar ones that we've seen before, frequently repeated responses, syntax quirks, word games, cultural references and, of course, the theme of the puzzle. Unfortunately, this means that crosswords can be downright unwelcoming to newcomers. Everyone starts somewhere, and no matter what your capabilities look like now, here are four general strategies to help you improve. No Puzzles every dayTo the only way to improve to crosswords is to do a lot of them, and the best way to do this is to work them out in your daily routine. For me, that means tackling a few puzzles from an old 365 Will Shortz crossword book before bed every night. My mom prints in the Washington Post crosswords and chips away at her breakfast; My friends who commute by bus or train are diehard New York Times crossword app fans. G/O Media can get a commission2-Pack: Juku Steam Coding KitsNew York Times puzzles are most folks crossword gateway drug for a reason: they are easy to find and have a built-in difficulty of classification. Monday is the easiest, Saturday is the hardest, and the puzzles between the ramp rise day by day, so you can choose the ones that work for you. That said, the New York Times is far from the only publisher there. The Washington Post, Los Angeles Times and Merriam-Webster also publish daily American-style crosswords; If cryptic crosswords are your jam, try The Guardian. Some organizations, such as Queer Crosswords and Puzzles for Progress, will even send you original themed puzzles as a reward for non-profit donations. Just remember that each publication has its own style-mastering suggesting complicated hint in a Saturday New York Times puzzle won't necessarily translate to one of the Post, and vice versa. Use an appIf you really want to pick up your crossword puzzle, subscribing to an app, that's the new York Times, it's a great idea. As much as I love them, the paper puzzles can achieve the easy-to-use features you get with an app. You can easily check your work or reveal letter-to-letter answers rather than accidentally peek at the entire solution. This demystifies only enough clues to make them feasible, which is exactly what you want. Most apps also time your work, which makes it easier to measure progress. But in fact, the biggest advantage is accessibility: carrying around thousands of digital puzzles in your pocket makes it easier to do a lot of puzzles. Find out when and is a sensitive subject among crossword enthusiasts, but there is no denying has its place. Crosswords should be fun, and repeatedly hitting my head against the same wall, praying for a different result, is not my idea of fun. In addition, frustration is a bad teacher: Unless you have serious competitive puzzle aspirations, stubbornly refusing to look for answers or check your work will get nowhere. A lot of games require a big investment of time, at least, if you want to have the best tools. ... A bit of strategic cheating can guide you through even the toughest puzzles. Apps make this super easy: just check or reveal the letters one at a time until you can solve a particularly nasty clue. This only gives you enough information to (mostly) hack it on your own, which in turn makes the answer more likely to stay in your memory. Paper puzzles make strategic cheating a little harder, but thanks to the Internet, not much. If you're stuck on a cross-word print, Google the entire hint in quotation marks. Framing your search around the clue, rather than, say, how many letters you need to work with will help you understand what clue you wanted from yourself. Over time, you'll find yourself needing less and less help to solve puzzles that previously would have been real stumbers. Uplift study you are serious about the mastery of crosswords, the Internet is full of homeinded people who would love to help. A blog like Rex Parker is a great place to start. He solves the New York Times puzzle every day, compares the difficulty with other puzzles from that day of the week, and breaks down key clue/response pairs into a short post. Between posts and comments, you'll get a more complete picture of the solution than if you just looked up the answers. You can also specialize even more and brush your crossword –words that frequently appear in crosswords, but almost never in conversation. The New York Times has a test that tests your knowledge of crosswords, and there's a more general guide to Dictionary.com. Perhaps predictably, there is also an entire site dedicated to crosswords, with a new word presented every day and an extensive archive. If a statistical approach is more your speed, there are crossword response databases out there. Scientist Noah Veltman analyzed a set of clues and answers about the New York Times from 1996-2012, then arranged them with crosswords and how often they appeared. You can filter lists by the minimum number of occurrences or by the length of the and see details of any given response. Similarly, Xwordinfo.com will show you the most popular answers and clues for Times puzzles by year or word length. Hell, you could really go all-out and code yourself some training programs like this guy did, though it's not clear if his approach is more effective than just doing a bunch of crosswords. This is not to say that you have to a robot or memorize clues to solve crossword puzzles more effectively; The best training strategy is the one that makes you happy. It doesn't matter how many puzzles you solve or how fast you can solve them – just keep them. If you can do that, you'll never stop getting better. Liverpool journalist Arthur Wynne invented the first crossword puzzle. Arthur Wynne Wynne born 22 June 1871, in Liverpool, England. He emigrated to the United States at the age of 19. He first lived in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and worked for the Pittsburgh Press. An interesting secondary note was that Wynne also played the violin in the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. Later, Arthur Wynne moved to Cedar Grove, New Jersey, and began working for a New York newspaper called New York World. He wrote the first crossword puzzle for New York World, published Sunday, December 21, 1913. The editor asked Wynne to invent a new game for The newspaper's Sunday entertainment section. Arthur Wynne's first crossword puzzle was originally called crosswords and was diamond-shaped. The name later switched to crosswords, and then, as a result of an accidental typo, the hyphen was abandoned and the name became crosswords. Wynne based his crossword swords on a similar but much older game played in the ancient pump, which translated from Latin to English, was called Magic Squares. In Magic Squares, the player is given a group of words and must arrange them on a grid, so that the words read the same way throughout and down. A crossword puzzle is very similar, unless instead of being given the player's words it is given clues. Arthur Wynne added other innovations to crossword puzzles. While the first puzzle was diamond-shaped, he later invented horizontal and vertical shaped puzzles; and Wynne invented the use of adding blank black squares to a crossword puzzle.
